Unlike other platform games, Emotions Of Time! takes place in a parallel world. This vibrant world with its own time-cycle and history is inhabited by a variety of creatures, monsters, and humans; all of whom require emotional nutrients to survive and prosper. The player must set out on a journey of emotional self-discovery to fight the forces of evil. Using Power-ups (which are commonly acquired by scoring Emotions) and the main character's powers to overcome obstacles and time-travel. KEY FEATURES • Inspired by emotions and mental states, Emotions Of Time! takes place in a parallel world. • One of the main character's powers is to travel through time. • Customize your Power-ups and choose from four moods - Laughter, Sadness, Anger, and Anxiety. • Play the game as both a Boss and a Mini-Boss, adapting your play-style and power-ups to your mission. • Strategize to take down the main villain and complete the main story line. • Think strategy to successfully complete the game without losing all your collected Emotions. • Experience the story through in-depth character profiles, videos, and artwork. • Engage in game activity with the game's community-based platform, The Emotional Social Network. In addition, there are four exclusive characters available for pre-order on Steam that are not in the base game. Pre-order bonus characters are: Kittycat (Sad) Electro-cat (Angry) Reptile (Laughter) Skunks (Anxiety) These bonus characters will be available for early access launch on Steam, available as two packs: • Kittycat and Electrocat: $3.79 • Reptile and Skunks: $3.79 All pre-orders are fulfilled in early July, 2017. te, [@B41]). This model was used to examine how immediate facial feedback may affect the perception of facial emotion. Adults with ASD and TD adults saw an actor of one of three different emotions (happiness, anger, fear) on a computer screen. Then they judged whether the face seemed happy or angry, and the SCR of other participants while completing this task was recorded. Remarkably, social anxiety and ASD are the only factors so far associated with lower ability to accurately judge emotions (Kiehl et al., [@B28]). While these results are intriguing, it is also worth noting that their way of measuring empathy relies heavily on self-reported questionnaires, which will result in a rather slow and ultimately less adequate assessment of ASD/social anxiety symptoms and their impact on empathic processes (Tarlier et al., [@B48]). To more efficiently measure the empathy of participants, a paradigms focusing on concepts of empathy in the witness or the agent as a whole would be more adequate. Warm Glow of Empathy -------------------- Teasing apart and accounting for the cognitive and emotional contribution to empathy is also challenging. Empathy can be explained by two different theories, the Theory of Mind and Schema theory. According to Theory of Mind theory, empathizing means a cognitive process to "imagine how it feels like to be another person" (Baron-Cohen et al., [@B5], p. 1), while in Schema theory, empathy is defined as the ability to understand how a social situation can be interpreted by another person (Malterer et al., [@B33], p. 253). Consistent with the latter definition, but in line with results from the second paradigm of the 22 Faces paradigm (Oberman et al., [@B37]; Pruesing et al., [@B40]), the role of facial emotion recognition in autism is complex. Individuals with ASD show not only an impaired ability to decode and evaluate social signals, but also their ability to interpret the social contexts is greatly reduced (Saxe et al., [@B43], [@B44]). Thus, an individual with ASD may not be able to infer someone's mental state from their faces when he/she is in a social situation (Holmes and Torda, [@B26]). Because of this, the empathic feeling in subjects with ASD is somewhat reduced. As for emotion recognition from facial emotion, it has been reported that the
