Indocyanine green fluorescence angiography (ICGA) allows immediate intraoperative visualisation of the vascular tree in the brain. However, this requires the surgical team to be prepared for potential extra-intraventricular dye delivery. We present a case of a very low birth weight premature infant with cystic periventricular leukomalacia, progressing to intraventricular haemorrhage, where the ICGA allows immediate decision making on the need for any further neurosurgical intervention. The use of radionuclide mediated effects (RME) provides for non-contact, real time intraoperative assessment of the central nervous system (CNS) in neonates.Evaluation of the genotoxicity of naphthalene and its metabolites using Escherichia coli genetic mutation tests. The cytotoxic effects of naphthalene and its two metabolites benzoquinone and 1,4-naphthoquinone were investigated using an in vitro short-term bacterial test for the detection of in vitro and in vivo clastogenic activity in Escherichia coli. A new and simple DNA-repair test, based on the measurement of the frequency of tryptophan auxotrophic revertants, was used. The results obtained after treatment of the S. typhimurium strains TA1535 and

TA1538 with naphthalene, its metabolites and benzoquinone were in agreement with data in
