You can create these layers if you create a new document in a blank location. * Locking and locking an empty layer: This is usually the first step when you create a new document and start work on an image. To lock a layer, bring the layer to the front so that it shows through its transparent color. * Setting an image's color and contrast: As a first step, you can manipulate the image's color by using the Adjustments panel's Color options, and it's important to get good color information if you want to do other types of image manipulation. * Creating a duplicate layer with an image on top: You can use this method to create a duplicate image that you can apply effects to or use it as a stamp. * Creating a new image: You can create a new image by using any of the approaches covered in this book's earlier chapters, or you can simply create your own image by opening a document you already have. 1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to spas and, more particularly, to a structure for mounting a water delivery system to the rim of a spa. 2. Description of the Related Art Spas are increasingly popular for both personal and business use. An individual having a spa in his or her home may save a considerable amount of money on utility bills over the cost of running a central unit in the home. Similarly, a business owner may reduce office overhead by running a spa in his or her office. Spas generally include a spa shell, a pump, a power source, and one or more jets. The spa shell has a cylindrical opening on one end that is sealed with a door. The spa shell is supported on a subjacent floor in an area where water can be provided. The pump is located below the spa shell and is coupled thereto by a shaft. The pump is powered by the power source (e.g., an electrical power cord), and, in turn, the pump provides a continuous supply of water to the spa. The jets are generally mounted on a top portion of the spa and are operated by a control circuit. One problem with spas of the type described above is that in many instances it is desirable to attach other components to the spa to increase the features or operational characteristics thereof. For example, some spa owners desire to mount controls such as a timer, a spa light, a spa fountain, and the like, directly to the top of the spa shell. Unfortunately, the spa shells are generally provided with a tub-like top portion having a generally circular perimeter. Accordingly, if conventional means were used to attach components to the top of the spa shell, it would be difficult to position the components in a desired location without interfering with the perimeter of the top portion of the shell. Another problem with spas of the type described above is that, during use, it is desirable to periodically loosen and remove the spa cover to permit insertion of the pump into the spa to replenish the water supply therein. With spas of the type described above, there exists a problem in that it is difficult to lift the spa cover from the spa shell so as to permit the insertion of the pump. Typically, spa covers may be as much as one or two feet off of the top of the spa shell. Accordingly, the spa cover must either be lifted to permit insertion of the pump therethrough or, alternatively, the spa must be partially dismantled to permit the insertion of the pump
