This is the same thing as my positive review with one exception: I played the original 2.0 version of the game instead of the 2.1 for this review. There were lots of stuff added into the game since 2.1, so the review will be very different to my previous one, but this is still worth playing (2.0 is dirt cheap on the Steam deal).

This review may or may not include spoilers and is not to be taken at face value.

About This Content"Two games that sound like they must be made by the same person." - Gamespot Gameplay POP: Methodology Experiment One is a game all about strategy and spotting mistakes that other people could take for granted. The result is a simulation of how the human mind works on its own when coming up with new ideas and solutions to problems. You are the CEO of a small business with an idea to sell computers to video game enthusiasts. Your product will have a small black box which will allow the user to play video games right on the box! Thats the plan. Your first challenge is finding a place to manufacture your computers and even if you have the best factory in the world, this process alone takes time and resources. What could you do to start making more money? What do you do? Keep the factory open 24 hours a day to churn out the best products you can? Hire new workers? Introduce a bonus program to raise productivity? Lower the prices to attract more customers? How many of your customers will you lose due to your competitors producing cheaper versions of your products? Youll need to keep an eye out for competitors who are trying to beat you to the punch. And make sure that your own products are the best. When you know how a person in a given environment will choose to act, you know the best way to get them to buy your product. In some cases its simply to lower the price, and if that doesnt work you may try to offer bonuses to customers. What would YOU do? Gameplay POP: Methodology Experiment One: Free Version Gameplay POP: Methodology Experiment One: Plus Version About This ContentGameplay POP: Methodology Experiment One is the only program designed to simulate the way the human mind works when coming up with new ideas. Gameplay POP: Methodology Experiment One is a fantastic simulation that will show you how the game of your dreams is written by the best minds in the world! How it is made will take you inside the minds of people who think big. Learn about everything from customer service, customer interaction, and long term business planning. How to come up with the perfect idea that is so brilliant that no one can come up with it, until you do. Think about when you were a kid and how you thought about things. Can you imagine how much a person can learn about the world when they think about what they know? "What would you do?" is a simulation that will allow you to build your idea into a reality.

What's new:

Knock, knock, c'mons answered the door, no, kids responded to the ringing of their mom's cell phone. The game of choice for the child of tech saavy parents? The Nokia fidget spinner. What, you thought all of us moms just let our babes play with anything in our pockets?! And you're right, but I like to think I'm more creative with my game time than most. So, I wanted to create a fun, easy (and cute) alternative to the fidget spinner. I love the versatility of this little gadget with the little gyroscope (really, watch this amazing YouTube video on how the fidget spinner works). Plus, I thought it would make a cute gift this holiday season. My objective: Make kids learn to type with the help of imagination, imagination and even more imagination. Game Idea Ok, so what exactly do I mean by this "kid designed" game? I asked each kid to come up with their own prop (I have a ton of different things, but everything that can be spun used!), and tell me the first phrase they imagine when you think of the phrase "Your Typing Game." My "kid designed" props could be anything from my kid's favorite stuffed animal to a photo of their favorite color. They ranged from all different shapes (a rubber ball, mini hoop on a stick and a banana) to sizes (a duck, a shoe) and all different materials

(wood and cardboard, but we created our own wooden fibers out of paper). I took their ideas and created a little bag for each kid, filled with their props. I, of course, was their navigator, which allowed them easy access to their properties. The biggest trip up, however, was packing everything inside the Spinner Pal's spare wheel! Design your own for $5.49 @ The Container Store To ensure everything stayed securely while in transport, I used The Container Store's reusable TSA approved Ziploc storage bag as part of the Spinner Pal's construction. Set the price of your new product @ The Container Store Game Play I created my own game, so I only had to figure out if this was something the kids would actually want to play with. I told each child that
