Q: Python function fails to update dataframe I have a dataframe with a timestamp column. I have written a function that is supposed to update the timestamp column on certain conditions. When the function is called it does not update the column, but it does return the correct result. The results returned are as follows: Original: timestamp ... 5/2/2020 6:00:00 AM 5/2/2020 8:00:00 AM 5/3/2020 6:00:00 AM 5/3/2020 8:00:00 AM Output: timestamp ... 5/2/2020 6:00:00 AM 5/2/2020 8:00:00 AM 5/3/2020 6:00:00 AM 5/3/2020 8:00:00 AM Where did I go wrong? def NbWrong(df): if df['timestamp'] != '': df['timestamp'] = datetime.datetime.strptime('c9d1549cdd', '%Y-%m-%d %H:%M:%S')

What's new in The Henry Stickmin Collection:

has 17 different Engagements, from innocent to dangerous and erotic, to help your objects move. The best part is, objects don't need to be forced into a pose. Objects can be caused to react dynamically to the controlling user. When you tell the object to engage in a pose based on your object's current emotion, it will do just that. Also unlike almost every other commercial pose-based animation program on the market at the moment, all your objects can be placed in infinite poses simultaneously in addition to their already infinite canvas. Place an object in any desired position and it's position will be saved when the program is quitted in the same position. Just like that. No moving back into a panel that was misformatted or accidentally deleted off the canvas. "Canvas" here refers to the actual iPad canvas. The ability to place multiples of the same object in infinite positions has also given rise to one of the many dynamic pose rendering systems in the new app. Select a current pose of an object, and the next 3 times the same object is placed in the same pose, the program will essentially undraw the same pose of the object, and redraw for you in the next 3 positions. ArtPose Pro is a must have for the serious 2D artist looking for a more professional and unpredictable animation engine. Please note! This is a special demo version - but the first version of ArtPose Pro - and it is (at least for now) being sold directly through the App Store. If you're a current Toonboom Animation Artist, you can download this enhanced version of your program with access to the most options by dialing back in. Just sign up for an account or log in (through the app itself - the current eSubscription system is down at the moment). The standard version of ArtPose will sell for around $15 later this month. And to everyone else still for sale on the App Store, and anyone who has bought ArtPose Pro - the program is more or less doubled in price - actually triple to be more precise. The reason is the current pricing breaks with the terms of the Apple program that we are part of. In fact, just this past notice that Qu has changed his outfit for a swimsuit. This is where the inventory system comes in, making it easier to find everything you need. Inventories When Qu sees Kotaro walk out of the Baths, she goes to a room with more bathing supplies and puts Kotaro's outfit away. Kotaro himself, however, has already put his costume away. In her room, Qu buys new bathing supplies for Kotaro. She picks up a bathrobe, pajamas, and cosmetics. This is one of several reasons why Qu decides to use the bathroom everyday. This is an inventory feature that provides a built-in storage system in the game, saving you time and money. Playable Character Qu is a playable character who has an interesting career in the bath. She is fun, mature, and independent. She is like any other woman, but she is different from a woman you have seen before. You'll always have something to find with the baby, who definitely knows how to have fun! Kotaro is about to go on his first adventure. Over at the airplane, a strange creature alerts him to a missing plane. First, he is going
