replied. "You know, there's always a vaccine. You could have the flu right now and go to an area that is vulnerable." This was Conway's response to questions from a member of the press — good health, flu, potential vulnerability. So what does the example tell us? I'm not suggesting this is sexism at work here. But isn't a portion of the evidence that women are being treated differently, with different standards from other people? We want to hear what you think about this article. Plenty of reasons to fight Bill Brexit: Plenty of reasons to fight Bill When the two Houses of Parliament voted to give assent to the European Union (Withdrawal) Bill, Priti Patel said she could not understand why our voted so consistently against the legislation. She may have been unaware that the European Union (Withdrawal) Bill gives Parliament a chance to participate in the withdrawal process. Furthermore, it includes safeguards: it will allow early Parliamentary scrutiny of the deal, prevent a hard border in Northern Ireland and, finally, it will make sure that the British people will have the right to choose whether we leave the European Union. It is a vital Bill and should attract cross-party support. Parliament must not relinquish its responsibilities. The nation has no greater priority than hitting back at the Brexit process, especially given the progress being made on those sectors included in the initial Brexit vote, like welfare and education. The vote on the Bill provided an opportunity to make sure that the positions adopted in the referendum are implemented and to establish a clear future path. The Government's progress relies on the process being developed by Article 50 of the Treaty of the European Union. This needs to inform, and not overrule, the negotiating position and proposals of the Prime Minister when faced with the EU. The Prime Minister will then be able to negotiate and convince the EU on the scope of the deal, that Parliament can approve and take in negotiations at full strength. On the other hand, Parliament, as it is the unified voice of the people, must be able to participate fully, unlike the current Government position.
