It should fix it. \autoindent ewline \indent0pt oindent ewline oindent oindent oindent \textbf{ For the Project } oindent \indent0pt oindent \textbf{ Programming Environment } his style of song was in vogue on the radio at the time, all of them were played regularly during his shows in the 1970's and 1980's. While many of his songs had the "feel good" nature, when he sang about women, there was always an edge to it that had a bit of a thrill to it. There was a "coming of age" quality to them for him. He put a bit of a relationship spin on it, where if there was an age difference between he and the girl, he'd exaggerate the difference or fix the attraction in some way (e.g. "If I was eighteen and you were ninety..."). The clearest message was "I like you." Whatever the girl answered, it was probably what he wanted to hear. Often the girl was flattered and complimented, and had even been offered protection or support. Some female fans wrote him letters after listening to the songs, but their first contact usually was when they saw him on stage. He seemed surprised by how many women wanted to talk to him and relate to him. In some songs he'd delve deeper into relationships and a woman might end up pregnant or still
