Sir, A 55-year-old man presented with a 4-week history of a slowly growing solitary painless nodule in the left submandibular area. On examination, a firm, immobile and smooth mass measuring 1.5 × 1.5 cm was palpable in the submandibular region. He had neither history of trauma nor tumor at that site before. There was no limitation of movement and or swelling in any other part of the body. No changes in sensorium was observed. A provisional diagnosis of salivary gland tumor was considered. The lesion was excised and the microscopic examination of the specimen revealed a highly cellular nodule composed of histiocytes . These cells were strongly immunoreactive to CD68 with very rare Touton cells . Thus, the final diagnosis was histiocytoma. The patient was advised for regular follow-up.
