BOKOVAC, Croatia (Reuters) - The Bosnian Croat commander of the U.N. force in Bosnia said on Sunday his troops were not responsible for an air strike that killed a top commander of the nationalist-led Bosniak army in the war-ravaged country. General Radislav Krstićko said by telephone that two bombs struck a Bosniak military camp north of Sarajevo on Sunday. He said a high-ranking officer died and two other people, a woman and a child, were wounded. "Whoever ordered this hit will pay for it," Krstićko told Reuters, alluding to the United Nations. "I'm a soldier, I have my job to do." The air strike came just days after the U.N. deployed two more Croats to the country to act as advisers to the Bosnian Serb-dominated peacekeeping force. The steps aimed to increase the overall strength of the 16,000-strong U.N. force in Bosnia to 8,000. Bosnia suffers from the world's worst ethnic tensions since the 1990-95 war that separated Serbs and Muslims from Croats, who have helped to keep peace for the past seven years. The air strike is
