Indomethacin, a non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID), was administered orally to adult female Wistar rats and female Hartley guinea-pigs at five different doses (0.5, 1, 2, 5 and 10 mg/kg) and its effects on the pituitary-adrenal axis were evaluated. Basal levels of plasma ACTH and corticosterone were significantly elevated in indomethacin-treated rats compared to the saline-treated animals. Similar elevations were observed in the adrenal weights of rats treated with indomethacin at the 5 and 10 mg/kg doses. In contrast to these rat findings, in indomethacin-treated guinea-pigs basal levels of plasma ACTH were not affected and pituitary weights were significantly reduced at the 10 mg/kg dose. No significant effects of indomethacin on plasma corticosterone levels were observed in either species at any dose tested. The acute in vivo pituitary sensitivity to synthetic ACTH was not altered by indomethacin in either species. These data indicate that the effects of indomethacin are species-specific with respect to its influence on the pituitary-adrenal axis.Q: Argument of type '(props: any) => string' is not assignable to parameter of type '(props: any) => void I'm trying to send a notification using a notification component in react-native.
