The new 64-bit Adobe Sigil browser looks a lot like Google Chrome. (It's actually just a Safari) This Chrome-like browser has a couple of benefits over the old browser, particularly for fast throughput. First, it uses a process model similar to that of Windows, thereby improving performance, especially on OS X. Second, it separates the browser process from the site you're accessing. This means after a web page has loaded, Safari won't have to re-load itself to get the HTML files it needs, hoping they've cached on disk. Instead, you'll be able to use other Web services such as Paypal.com. Third, it uses the power of Javascript loads to perform the same functions any page would. You'll see fewer visual glitches and results in less lag. It's great. Adobe XD for iPad Pro. Cons: The UI is a bit of work to get the hang of, and it's not what most people think of when they think of Photoshop. (e.g., text, distort, boxes, and cloud shapes) It's more like Illustrator. Pros: It gives you many of the same tools in a different format, so you can edit files as you would in Photoshop, and share a file easily on the Web. Photoshop is the industry's standard image-editing application. Adobe has released seven major versions since Photoshop CS first appeared in 1991. That's seven years of continual improvement. The latest, Adobe Photoshop Lightroom 5, is the culmination of a decade's worth of development because it seamlessly integrates a new type of image technology: RAW. Lightroom is an excellent Photoshop alternative, because it increases the features and usability of Photoshop CS3.

As you begin to create an image you can view the various tools that you have access to. You can zoom in and out of your image using the tools called 'Zoom in' and 'Zoom out' and 'Fit Image'. You can use the various tools on the right side of the screen called 'Paints'. If you would like you can move your view to the right and use the tools on the 'draw' tabs, but to do so you'll have to scroll right in your window. You can also change the zoom, fit, or canvas or make selections in your image. In order to change your view you can click the 'Zoom' icon on the top left or you can click and drag to the left the window.
